

Introducing Residents' Corner

In this issue of the Annals, we are pleased to introduce a Residents' Corner with the expressed aims of:

1. Getting residents to read the Annals by publishing articles of specific relevance to them.
2. Giving residents a platform to publish their work in a less competitive environment.

For a start, we have an invited article by Dr Lo Hong Yee giving his views on protected time versus service commitments within a surgical residency programme. It is thoughtfully written and we are sure it will be an enjoyable read for residents and their programme chairs alike. More importantly, we hope it will generate interest and exchange of views among our residents, raising future topics to sustain this section.

Future invited topics include other residents' views on work-lifestyle balance and taking up a service versus a residency position. We hope residents will read and make this section truly theirs by contributing their views and work to be published here.
